A: You can use this pattern to extract the substring:

"[(\\S\\s)"registrationkeyforreginoutsystemutilities30"(\\S\\s)"]" Q: Google account recovery email verifies to user but token is invalid I'm facing problems sending email via my personal google account to recover my google account. I have created a new google account email (1@gmail.com) and I'm having problems recovering the old account because when I click on the links in the email I get an error stating that my username is invalid. To solve this problem

I've submitted a recovery request via my new email (1@gmail.com). The problem is that the email that submits the recovery request is addressed to the old email (2@gmail.com) and the link that is contained in the email is generated by the old google account. I have tried to change the recovery request link to any google domain without success. Please any help with this or any alternative to recover the old google account. A: As it appears you have created a new gmail address, (1@gmail.com) and then created a new Google account with that address, (2@gmail.com). Therefore, the @gmail.com address is not associated with the 2 account. Perhaps more difficult to understand is why you are trying to recover the old 2 account but creating a new one. The 2 email addresses are not linked and there is no need to make a second attempt at recovering. Either remove the email address entirely or simply create a new account with the alternate email address. Once you do this the recovery system will recognize the new account and the link should work. Holden is well-known for manufacturing a range of different vehicles. So it is no surprise the company will soon start building electric vehicles. As the car giant confirms its plans, one expert has shared his opinion on whether this decision makes sense. The automaker will be producing electric vehicles in China More specifically, Holden will be building battery-powered versions of the company's cars in China. These vehicles will all be based on the second-generation Opel Insignia, so there will be both hybrid and electric versions. To go back to earlier times, Holden is a brand controlled by the government-owned Australian car giant General Motors. With recent financial and political problems, Holden is considering reducing

Texas Republican candidate for governor Greg Abbott said on Sunday that he is confident he'll pick up the "undecided" votes of women who backed his losing bid for governor in 2014. Abbott joined MSNBC's "PoliticsNation" to talk about who he thinks will win in November's midterm elections and what he has learned in the past four years as a state lawmaker, as lieutenant governor and now as a gubernatorial candidate. Abbott, who lost the race to Texas Democrat Wendy Davis in 2014, said he's been a big believer in the core support of his conservative base, which he said included women. "I'm confident that we can get enough of these women in these moderate and undecided female voters," Abbott told host Al Sharpton. "What I learned as lieutenant governor is to be able to speak to my conservative base is to come across as a male conservative. "I'm not a male conservative. I'm a pro-life, I'm pro-gun, I believe in a strong national defense, I think our country is the greatest in the history of the world, all those things," he continued. "If I can't communicate those things to my conservative base, there's a problem." Later, Sharpton asked Abbott if he was worried that the presidential race was overshadowing the high-profile gubernatorial contest. Let our news meet your inbox. I'm in this race because I believe that it's important for the state of Texas, the nation of Texas, that we have a conservative executive," he answered. "The time is now, though." However, Sharpton asked if, as a white male, Abbott was worried 3e33713323
