From a new user's perspective, the transition from using Office as a standalone suite to using the suite as a cloud-based service can be a bit confusing. With Office 365, how do you know which Office applications [...] End users seem to love Windows Live Essentials, a small group of pre-installed Windows applications, because they're instantaneously available and free. While the group of tools is small, some of them are also critical to the overall functionality and productivity of Windows, like Mail, OneNote, Movie Maker, etc. Other features, such as NetMeeting, still require an additional subscription. At times, end users must do their own email accounts, and some of them prefer to use mobile devices to accomplish it. Some even do it from a Linux PC or Mac. There are options out there for Windows to do it, but they often get in the way, and may not be compatible with your device, like Android, iOS, or Windows [...] Laptops, tablets, and other mobile devices are great productivity tools when they work properly. But when they don't, they can really hamper your ability to get work done. Did you know that one out of every three laptops gets stolen in the U.S.? And that over 75% of lost or stolen mobile devices are never recovered? The good news is you can dramatically reduce the risk of losing data by taking certain steps to protect your data. In a recent survey by Norton, an estimated 32% of IT managers said their users have used a remote access program in the past year. This is an increase from a
