Partial nephrectomy: an update on contemporary practice and evolving technique. Partial nephrectomy has been the standard of care in the management of small renal masses for the last two decades. Since its introduction in 1994, the technique of partial nephrectomy has improved significantly. Currently, over 250,000 partial nephrectomies are performed in the United States annually, and the clinical benefits of this minimally invasive procedure have become clear. This article will summarize the current status of partial nephrectomy and the technique used by practicing urologists. The clinical benefits and shortcomings of the procedure, including potential contraindications to partial nephrectomy, as well as surgical nuances, will be discussed. In addition, the evolution of and emerging techniques for performing partial nephrectomy will be highlighted.
