circuit and more specifically to a semiconductor circuit which is formed on an insulating substrate and has the characteristic that the input capacitance of a circuit element, which is a transistor for instance, is reduced by providing a third terminal of the transistor. For a logic circuit or a memory circuit for instance, a large number of transistors are connected to form a plurality of gate lines or bit lines. These gate lines and bit lines are connected to a single address line via a plurality of transistors in a matrix system. A gate signal is applied to each gate line to thereby select the transistor to which data is to be input. In addition, a predetermined potential which corresponds to data input to the selected transistor is applied to a bit line connected to the selected transistor. A potential which corresponds to the data input to the selected transistor is applied to a bit line connected to the selected transistor. A predetermined potential which corresponds e79caf774b
