Amino acid sequence of beta-D-glucopyranosyl glycoside of myoglobin apoprotein. The amino acid sequence of the beta-D-glucopyranosyl glycoside of myoglobin apoprotein has been determined by analyses of peptides isolated from the aglycoside by enzymic hydrolysis and by chemical cleavage with enzymes. Glycosylation occurs at Asn104. The site of glucosylation (Asn104) is directly involved in the heme binding, and the non-covalently bound heme is preserved.

What's New In?

Conservative groups plan to pile on Mitt Romney with Web ads criticizing him as a moderate on social issues like abortion and gay rights in an effort to blunt his edge in the presidential campaign's final week. The right-leaning outside spending group American Crossroads is planning three separate spots, according to the group's political director, Mike Murphy. His opponents — the national and state chapters of Americans United for Life and the Campaign for Marriage Promotion — are planning to run comparable ads. Murphy said the spot about Romney as the "candidate of tolerance" will run in swing states Colorado, Iowa and Virginia. "Anyone who looks closely at Gov. Romney's views will see that he's not a moderate on these issues," Murphy said. The next spot, which will take aim at Romney's "flip-flopping" on gay rights and abortion, will be in states like Florida, Michigan and North Carolina. And the final ad, which will target Romney's comments to his church in Massachusetts in favor of gay rights, is set to run in Utah, Nebraska and Arizona. All three ads are slated to begin running late this week or early next week. The ads will run in an effort to remind voters of some of Romney's past positions and portray him as having changed his views, unlike President Obama. The ads are the latest salvo in the Romney campaign's effort to highlight Obama as someone who has changed his views to meet the political winds. Romney is running close to the president in many polls and is widely seen as having the momentum in recent weeks. The Romney campaign first began setting up ads on abortion and gay marriage earlier this year. At that time, the ads were concentrated in states like Ohio and Virginia and were criticized by some for being vague. But the campaign has since toned down the rhetoric in the ads and expanded the territories where the ads are now running. The move to run the ads on abortion and gay rights in swing states, where those issues play more heavily in the race than in other swing states, comes at a crucial time. Obama is running ads accusing Romney of changing his views on abortion since he was governor of Massachusetts. The attacks will likely run for weeks in a bid to remind voters that Romney has long been at odds with a woman's right to choose and gay rights. The attacks on abortion are geared toward winning women, who make up more than a third of the electorate in several states. The attacks on Romney's gay rights views
