Cryptococcal glomerulopathy and pulmonary aspergillosis have also been reported \[@B2\]. Although most cases of cryptococcal meningitis were related to disseminated cryptococcosis \[@B1, @B3\], isolated cryptococcal glomerulonephritis is rare. In a patient with acute renal failure and nephrotic syndrome, the diagnosis of cryptococcal glomerulonephritis was made and the patient was treated with high-dose antifungal therapy. Case Presentation {#sec1_2} ===== A 17-year-old male patient was admitted to the intensive care unit because of acute renal failure. The patient's past history was not relevant. His main complaints were fever, headache, nausea, and vomiting. On physical examination, skin appeared pale. Pertinent laboratory findings included: hemoglobin 12.7 g/dL, hematocrit 32.8%, leukocyte count $15,900/\text{mm}^3$, and platelet count $400,000/\text{mm}^3$. Renal function was decreased with serum creatinine 23.4 mg/dL, BUN 56 mg/dL, and creatinine clearance 17.5 mL/min. Urinalysis showed active sediments, 7+ proteinuria, and the results of urine culture were negative. Other laboratory examinations were normal. Bilateral hydronephrosis, multiple renal sinus calcification, and both lower extremity edema were noticed on abdominal and pelvic ultrasonography. There were no skin lesions and lung lesions were not seen on computed tomography. There were multiple basal lesions in both of the patient's kidneys (Fig. 1{ref-type="fig"}). The patient was initially treated with broad-spectrum antibiotic therapy. On the second day, he was treated with whole-brain and abdominal punctures, and antifungal therapy was started.
