The Web and the Internet are filled with copyright enforcement software. One of these is likely your firewall. If your firewall recognizes your viewing software as a Trojan horse, or is simply complaining about its nature, then it's blocking access to what you really want. I personally use a program called Antizip, and I've been very happy with it. A few of the users of the site have also been using this program, and they enjoy it, so if this works for you I highly recommend giving it a try. That said, it's not an "open-source" app, so you won't find this program in the normal "open-source" software repositories. Just kidding. But seriously, it's not an open-source application and it's not available in the standard "open-source" repositories. If you want to know more about Antizip, check out their site, which is a bit difficult to find. This is what the software looks like: Click the picture to download a 32-bit version, if available.
