A: This is probably because you are using the system proxy. Check that you are not. You can see this by opening your browser, clicking on about and checking the proxy settings. Open Control Panel, click on Internet Options (under the "gear" icon) and select "Connection" in the left hand list Click on "LAN settings" Check "Use a proxy server for your LAN" If it says "Automatic proxy discovery is turned off for this network", this is probably the problem. You will see a very long list of possible proxy servers.

Select "Use proxy server from my current location" Enter "" and press "OK" You can also set the proxy server from the system. Off-road vehicle An off-road vehicle (ORV, sometimes abbreviated as off-roader) is a type of vehicle with four-wheel drive that is used for off-road use or for rough terrain, for example, a snowmobile, dune buggy, jeep, or quad. Off-road vehicles can be either completely open or enclosed and are designed for harsh environments like snow, sand, mud, etc. Off-road vehicles are largely differentiated by how they handle terrain, their performance or payload. They can be divided into two broad categories: "traction" and "speed" vehicles. Traction vehicles include snowmobiles, dune buggies, jeeps, and ATVs, which are "traction" vehicles, while the quad and motorcycle are "speed" vehicles. Speed is usually measured in revolutions per minute (rpm), and torque is the traction force generated by a driven wheel. Power is usually measured in either horsepower or torque, depending on the desired unit of measure. Traction vehicles are designed for operation in very rough terrain and typically produce a low torque, low powered engine and are typically used for navigation, exploration, adventure, and play.
